Off Year May Impact Holiday Pecan Volume

By Linda Breazeale
MSU Ag Communications

Mississippians love holiday recipes with pecans, but an off year may make the nuts more expensive and harder to find.

Eric Stafne, associate Extension and research professor at the Mississippi State University Coastal Research and Extension Center, said the state's pecan crop is forecast at 1 million pounds. The state produced 5 million pounds last year, and Mississippi's average pecan harvest is 2-3 million pounds.

"Pecans typically are an alternate-bearing fruit, which means bumper crops are often followed the next year by much smaller harvests," he said. "This year, some growers also had yield losses to pecan scab disease, but many commercial producers were able to minimize those losses. Small producers or homeowners are out of luck without the proper equipment to spray trees."

Stafne said recent cultivars offer some resistance to certain diseases, but trees need to be at least 6 or 7 years old before they are commercially productive.

T.A. Duke of Duke Pecan Co. in West Point said early-season prices are similar to last year, but a smaller crop could trigger higher prices as the holidays approach. He said early market prices in Georgia had unshelled Stuart pecans at about $1.25 per pound.

"In addition to being a smaller crop, this year's pecans are running about two weeks later than normal," Duke said. "Trees generally start putting on leaves around the first of April, but last spring, it was closer to May. The relatively mild summer did not move their maturity along any faster, either."

Good news for commercial producers is the expansion in exports. Duke said pecans have become an international crop with more being sold to China and Europe in recent years.

Stafne said one challenge in Mississippi is that many producers are newer growers and are still learning the ropes.

"Most questions I have gotten so far are from the growers who may not understand the lack of nuts this year," he said.

This statewide concern is one reason Stafne will be leading a free, two-hour pecan workshop on December 11 in Sunflower County. The program will cover general pecan production issues. It begins at 2 p.m. in the Sunflower County Extension Office, located at 112 Martin Luther King Drive South in Indianola. For more information regarding the pecan workshop contact Dr. Eric Stafne at 601-403-8939.

Mississippi trees are producing fewer pecans than normal this year, but consumers will be pleased with the size and taste of most nuts, such as these from an orchard in Oktibbeha County. This photo was taken on October 31, 2014. (Photo by MSU Ag Communications/Linda Breazeale)

Pecan Alternate Bearing Challenges Production

By Charles Rohla
Noble Foundation

Pecan trees exhibit a strong tendency to produce a heavy crop one year, followed by one or more years of little to no production. This may best be characterized as alternate bearing with irregular symmetry. Alternate bearing is the most significant horticultural problem in pecan production.

Alternate bearing is caused by a biennial cycling in flowering that takes place at the shoot level but is recognized at the tree, orchard, and regional levels. An interesting aspect of alternate bearing is that it occurs not just on an orchard level, but normally it is expressed throughout the production region. The result is that regional production will be high one year followed by a low year.

Alternate bearing is enhanced by biotic (e.g., aphid or scab) and abiotic (e.g., drought or nutrient stress) stresses. Cultural practices, such as annual fertilization, irrigation, and pruning strategies can have pronounced effects on alternate bearing. Intensive management reduces the natural tendency of pecans to alternately bear; however, it does not eliminate it. Cultivars vary in their tendency to alternate bear. Typically, cultivars that yield the most in a short time after establishment have a greater tendency to be more severe alternate bearers.

In pecans, flowers that produce the following year's crop are initiated in the shoots of the trees during the time of year when the current year's crop is maturing. Therefore, stress to the trees during this time of year affects the next year's crop. Unlike other fruit crops, pecan fruit mature late in the season, leaving little time for carbohydrate storage to occur before leaf fall. Carbohydrate reserves stored in the roots and shoots are utilized in the spring flush of shoot growth and in the terminally positioned female flower development. Flower initiation and development is controlled by interactions of several factors including overall tree health, carbohydrate reserves, and a balance of plant hormones.

This irregular and often unpredictable production impacts all economic aspects of pecan production and marketing. Alternate bearing is typically associated with a lack of return bloom rather than flower or fruit abortion. Researchers have not yet discovered the causes of alternate bearing in pecans. There have been several theories for pecan alternate bearing, including stored carbohydrate, phytohormones or growth regulators, and nitrogen and/or potassium depletion during large crops. To date, many of these previous theories have been proven to not be the cause of alternate bearing in pecans, and further research is being conducted.

USDA also extended the opportunity for public comments on both the Margin Protection Program and the Dairy Product Donation Program until December 15, 2014.

So God Made a Farmer

By Lise Foy, Director
MS Agriculture & Forestry Museum

Google 'history of farming' and you will find that farming shows up in history around 8,500 BC in the Fertile Crescent, which stretches from Israel north to southeast Turkey then curves southeast to the Persian Gulf. People began to grow wheat, barley, peas, and lentils instead of gathering them wild. By 7,000 BC, they domesticated sheep, pigs, and goats. By 6,000 BC they domesticated cattle.

Evidence of farming in the Americas can be tracked back to the Aztec, Inca, and Mayan civilizations who farmed maize as a staple crop. These people also grew tomatoes, avocados, beans, and peppers, as well as pumpkins, squashes, and peanuts, and meat sources included rabbits, turkeys, and armadillos. The Maya even kept bees for honey.

These people did not have plows, much less a mule to pull one. Like the Native Americans who lived along the Mississippi River Valley, they used a digging stick called a dibble.

Working Corn Jab Planter made by the Sheffield Mfg. Co., Burr Oak Michigan, dating to 1901, now part of the collection at the Ag Museum.

A dibble is a pointed wooden stick for making holes in the ground so that seeds, seedlings or small bulbs can be planted. In some instances, one man would walk with a dibble making holes, and a second man would plant seeds in each hole and fill it in. The Native Americans did not necessarily plant in rows though.

We planted our corn maze at the Ag Museum in a similar manner, only we used a hoe to make the holes. We also tried out a jab planter, recently donated to our education collection (meaning we will use it for educational demonstrations and not just for display). This tool, a step toward innovation from the dibble stick, is a manually powered machine filled with seed. The farmer carries the jab planter like a walking cane. Sticking the point into the earth and using the hole as a pivot point, the farmer pivots the planter forward about 30 degrees. A spring-loaded foot opens the jaws of the point. The seeds are dropped through the seed plate and fall into the hole. It took a crew of five the better part of a day to plow and plant our small plot using these methods.

Experience is good. And, I love that I can say I have plowed a mule (two passes, straight as the Mississippi itself too) and have planted corn by hand. We have a sample of understanding of what it used to take to have food to eat and the methods used by our ancestors to produce a crop. Needless to say, however, after the corn planting experiment, we are now in the market for a planter to go behind one of our tractors for this project next year. Innovation is also good.

With Thanksgiving approaching, we all stop to consider our blessings, usually including the food on the table and the hands that prepared it. The task of getting the food to the table used to be much more of a part of everyday life. A statement was made recently in my presence that I think is worth repeating. A farmer is a full-time farmer so the rest of us can be a full-time something else. How true.

In 1978, Paul Harvey delivered this speech to the Future Farmers of America Convention. It was aired during last year's Superbowl as a Dodge Truck commercial. The script is so appropriate for the Thanksgiving season.

And on the 8th day, God looked down on his planned paradise and said, "I need a caretaker." So God made a farmer.

God said, "I need somebody willing to get up before dawn, milk cows, work all day in the fields, milk cows again, eat supper, and then go to town and stay past midnight at a meeting of the school board." So God made a farmer.

"I need somebody with arms strong enough to rustle a calf and yet gentle enough to deliver his own be sure and come back real soon -- and mean it." So God made a farmer.

God said, "I need somebody willing to sit up all night with a newborn colt. And watch it die. Then dry his eyes and say, 'Maybe next year.' I need somebody who can shape an ax handle from a persimmon sprout, shoe a horse with a hunk of car tire, who can make harness out of haywire, feed sacks, and shoe scraps. And who, planting time and harvest season, will finish his forty-hour week by Tuesday noon, then, pain'n from 'tractor back,' put in another seventy-two hours." So God made a farmer.

God had to have somebody willing to ride the ruts at double speed to get the hay in ahead of the rain clouds and yet stop in mid-field and race to help when he sees the first smoke from a neighbor's place. So God made a farmer.

God said, "I need somebody strong enough to clear trees and heave bails, yet gentle enough to tame lambs and wean pigs and tend the pink-combed pullets, who will stop his mower for an hour to splint the broken leg of a meadow lark. It had to be somebody who'd plow deep and straight and not cut corners. Somebody to seed, weed, feed, breed, and rake and disc and plow and plant and tie the fleece and strain the milk and replenish the self-feeder and finish a hard week's work with a five-mile drive to church.

"Somebody who'd bale a family together with the soft strong bonds of sharing, who would laugh and then sigh, and then reply, with smiling eyes, when his son says he wants to spend his life 'doing what dad does.'" So God made a farmer.

As you are being thankful this season, don't forget the farmer.

Goats Grow in Popularity as Farmers Diversify

By Susan Collins-Smith
MSU Ag Communications

Goats are growing in popularity among Mississippi livestock producers who have limited acreage or want to diversify their farming business.

"Since 2012, the overall number of meat goats in the southeastern region of the state has increased," said Mitch Newman, Greene County agricultural agent with the Mississippi State University Extension Service. "More small farmers want to raise livestock to supplement other income, and some landowners have fragmented property, which makes raising cattle unrealistic."

Compared to cattle, goats that are managed well can thrive on fewer acres, reproduce more quickly, and mature faster, Newman said.

One cow can grow well on two acres of good pasture and can produce an average of two calves every 24 months.

In contrast, six adult goats can thrive on the same area of quality land as one cow. A doe in optimal condition can give birth two to three times every 24 months and is more likely to have twins or triplets. Goats reach an ideal market weight between 60 to 80 pounds, depending on variations in breed and management practices, Newman said.

Goats are a niche segment of agriculture in Mississippi, grown for meat, milk, hair, and 4-H youth livestock projects. The U.S. Department of Agriculture's 2012 Census of Agriculture estimated sales of meat goats in the state at $986,000. The market value of all products sold in this specialty segment of agriculture, which includes sheep, goats, wool, mohair, and milk, is estimated at $2.3 million.

As ethnic populations in the U.S. increase, consumer demand for goats is expected to continue to grow. That is another reason producers add goats to their farms, Newman said.

Dewayne Smith, a Greene County producer, began raising goats about 12 years ago as a food source for his family. Three years ago he began to expand his herd for the commercial market.

"I've grown my herd to 120 head," Smith said. "There is a demand out there and room for more producers in Mississippi's market."

Smith is passionate about educating children and adults about agriculture. His grandchildren show goats in the 4-H livestock program and tend to their animals daily at his farm.

"It's a lot of fun for us," Smith said. "The goats pull us together as a family, and we all really enjoy working with them."

Smith also helps educate others through the Greene County Cooperating Agriculturalists. The group shares information about sustainable production, marketing, and merchandising of livestock and other agricultural products. The group formed a hands-on club for children who want to learn to raise livestock.

Darryl Byrd added meat goats to his cattle operation about 10 years ago and now breeds and sells Kiko goats with business partner Jesse Beech. They belong to a breeders' alliance and sell their goats all over the country.

"I think more producers are interested in goats," Byrd said. "We have a sold-out market in Long Beach. We are building fence and preparing pasture for additional goats in Greene and Perry Counties to meet the demand we have."

Since the early 1990s, sale outlets for meat goats have grown beyond auction barns to include local markets created by producers, specialty buyers in other states, and breeder association sales.

"The market channels for goats are very different," said Kipp Brown, Extension goat specialist. "But market prices follow the same trends as other red meat. Prices rise in the spring and near holidays such as Easter or Ramadan. Then they'll taper off for a few months."

Currently, selection one kids are bringing from $1.50 to $2.30 per pound at the graded sale in Bowling Green, Kentucky, Brown said.

Any breed and type of goat, including dairy goats, can be used for meat. During the last 20 years, Mississippi producers have crossbred Boar and Kiko breeds with native goats to increase muscle mass and parasite resistance, Brown said.

Although goats have some advantages over cattle, Mississippi's wet, humid climate can cause health challenges.

"Mississippi growers should build an 18 percent death loss into their budgets, with most of that loss attributed to parasites," Brown said. "During times of high rainfall, wet pastures can cause increased foot and parasite problems."

Producers should educate themselves before investing in goats, Brown said.

"Raising goats takes lots of planning and hard work," he said. "Several management practices can help producers be successful. If they will follow proper rotational grazing on good forage, learn to implement a strategic worming schedule and proper dosage, and put the required work into it, they can be very successful."

Interested individuals can learn about raising goats during the Southeast Kiko Goat Association Fall Roundup and Sale November 14 and 15 at the Forrest County Multipurpose Center in Hattiesburg, Mississippi.

Experts with the MSU Extension Service, Tennessee State University, and the Alabama Cooperative Extension Service will present educational seminars at the event. Topics include forage systems, parasite management, fire ant control, reproductive management, and record keeping.

The event is free and open to the public. Registration begins at 8 a.m. November 14. Seminars conclude at 6:30 p.m. with a goat meat dinner. The event again begins at 8 a.m. November 15 with educational seminars, a 4-H/FFA skill-a-thon, and an opportunity to view farm displays and talk with current producers. The breeding stock sale begins at noon.

Equipment Theft Investigation by MDAC Leads to Recovery

By Jeff Stewart
Director of Mississippi Agricultural and Livestock Theft Bureau

On October 2, the Mississippi Agricultural and Livestock Theft Bureau (MALTB), the law enforcement division of the Mississippi Department of Agriculture and Commerce (MDAC), recovered numerous pieces of stolen equipment. The Bureau anticipates arrests and charges to be forthcoming in the future.

Lead MALTB Investigator, Mike Braswell, along with MALTB investigators, Mike McGowan and Sonny Vincent, and with assistance from Sheriff Greg Waggoner of the Leake County Sheriff's Office recovered approximately $200,000 of equipment in Carthage, Mississippi. This includes a John Deere 7710 tractor, a John Deere 4520 tractor with a loader and bush-hog attachment, John Deere 569 hay baler, a Polaris 800 Ranger, and a zero-turn mower.

Commissioner of Agriculture and Commerce Cindy Hyde-Smith commended the investigators for their hard work and dedication and would like to thank Sheriff Waggoner and the Leake County Sheriff's Department for assisting in this investigation. Jeff Stewart, Director of MALTB, says equipment theft is a re-occurring problem in the State of Mississippi and that owners should always be aware of where your equipment is and to always keep it out of sight and secured.

The Mississippi Agricultural and Livestock Theft Bureau enforces laws to prevent the theft of livestock, timber, and agricultural products and investigates all agricultural crimes. The Bureau also handles the registration of all livestock brands in the State. The cost to register a brand is $5 for a registration period of 5 years. To report or provide information regarding an agricultural crime, call (800) 678-2660.
